DU BUQUE, SATURDAY, November 25.

TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.—On the fourth page of to-day's paper will be found the proceedings of this body. The memorials set forth the wants of the people in a clear and forcible light, which together with the aid of the Legislative Assembly, we confidently hope something may be done by Congress, for the relief of our long suffering country. The people of Wisconsin have looked to our delegate in Congress [illegible] to do that which they themselves could not be accomplishing. Without [illegible] our [illegible] families people, our [illegible] and industrious [illegible] but little, in making [illegible] ants of the country [illegible] suffered much for the [illegible] outlaws prayed for in [illegible] assembly felt, and that [illegible] will know, yet scarcely [illegible] consent to Congress, [illegible] base his demand [illegible] to the various [illegible] to the country, [illegible] law, granting [illegible] from competition [illegible] stands pre-emi- [illegible] sacrifice can be [illegible] The [illegible] they look for [illegible] unpleasant situa- [illegible] to wide [illegible] of [illegible] eyes turned to [illegible] of Iowa for their [illegible] upon his exertions, [illegible] wherewith to [illegible] necessity of the [illegible] the people in [illegible] Conventions [illegible] petition Con- [illegible] must be done [illegible] so interestedly [illegible] which are made by [illegible] in the end they [illegible] prayers grant- [illegible] have been much [illegible] point of view.

Justice to the town authorities require that the many improvements which have and are being made in our town should be noticed. They have gone to work in right earnest, and have made the roughest places in our streets smooth, by cutting off the high and filling up the low places, which adds greatly to the beauty of our former handsome streets. Should the weather continue favorable for a few weeks longer and the work go on at the same rate, we will soon have the handsomest place in the west. Nature has done much for us, but her work has [illegible] greatly improved.

The committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the affairs of the Miners' Bank of Du Buque, closed their examination on Tuesday the 3rd inst. and left for Burlington. The general impression of our citizens is that the committee found nothing in its affairs contrary to the Charter.

MEMORIAL OF THE CONVENTION OF DELEGATES OF THE PEOPLE OF THE WISCONSIN TERRITORY, WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

A Convention of Delegates representing a large majority of the people of that part of Wisconsin Territory lying west of the Mississippi river, have assembled at Burlington, the present seat of Government of said Territory, for the purpose of taking into consideration several measures immediately affecting their interests and prosperity. Among the most important of these is the passage by your honorable bodies at the session about to be commenced, of a pre-emption law, by which the settlers on the public lands shall have secured to them at the minimum price, the lands upon which they live, which they have improved and cultivated without fear of molestation, or over-bidding on the part of the rich capitalist and speculator. It is a fact well known to your honorable bodies that none of the land in Wisconsin west of the Mississippi river in what is called the "Iowa District," has yet been offered for sale by the Government. It is equally true that that tract of country is now inhabited by twenty-five thousand souls composing a population as active, intelligent, and worthy as can be found in any other part of the United States. The enterprize of these pioneers has converted what was but yesterday a solitary and uncultivated waste into thriving towns and villages, alive with the engagement of trade and commerce, and rich and smiling farms, yielding their bountiful return to the labors of the husbandman. This district has been settled and improved with a rapidity unexampled in the history of the country, emigrants from all parts of the United States and from Europe are daily adding to our numbers and importances. An attempt to force these lands to be sold to the highest bidder, and to put the money thus extorted from the hard earnings of an honest and laborious people into the coffers of the public treasury, would be an act of injustice to the settlers which would scarcely receive the sanction of your honorable bodies. In most cases the labor of years and the accumulated capital of a whole life has been expended in making improvements on the public land, under the strong and firm belief that every safeguard would be thrown around them to prevent their property, thus dearly earned by years of suffering, privation and toil, from being unjustly wrested from their hands. Shall they be disappointed? Will Congress refuse to pass such laws as may be necessary to protect a large class of our citizens from systematized plunder and rapine? The members composing this convention, representing a very large class of people, who delegated them to speak in their stead, do most confidently express an opinion that your honorable bodies will at its present session pass some law removing us from danger, and believing it proper for us on this subject to plead our own cause, the members of this convention for themselves, and for the people whose interests they are present here to represent, do most respectfully solicit that your honorable bodies will, as speedily as possible, pass a pre-emption law giving to every actual settler on the public domain who has made improvements sufficient to evince that it is bona fide his design to cultivate and occupy the land, the right to enter at the minimum government price, one half section for the purpose, before it shall be offered at public sale.

MEMORIAL ON THE SUBJECT OF THE MISSOURI BOUNDARY LINE.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, a Convention of Delegates from the citizens of that part of the Territory of the Mississippi river, taking into consideration their isolated position, and the extent of country included within the limits of the present Territory, the impracticability of the same being governed as an entire Territory in the wisest and best administration of our municipal affairs in such manner as to fully secure individual right and the right of property, and to maintain domestic tranquility and the good order of society, by their respective representatives convened in general convention at the seat of Government for the purpose of availing themselves of their right of petition, as free citizens, by representing to your honorable bodies, and asking for the organization of a separate Territorial Government over that part of the Territory of Wisconsin west of the Mississippi river.

Without, in the least, designing to question the official conduct of those to whose hands the fate of our infant country has been confided, and in their patriotism and wisdom we have the utmost confidence, your memorialists cannot refrain from the frank expression of their belief that, taking into consideration the geographical extent of her country, in connexion with the probable population of Western Wisconsin, perhaps no Territory of the United States has been so much neglected by the parent government, or fully protected in the political and individual rights of her citizens.

Western Wisconsin came into the possession of one government in June 1823. Settlement were made, and crops grown, during the same season; and even then, at that early day, was the impulse given to the mighty throng of emigration that has subsequently filled our lovely and desirable country with people, intelligence, wealth, and enterprize. From that period until the present, being a little over four years, what has been the Territory of Western Wisconsin? Literally and practically, a large portion of the time without a government. With a population of thousands, she has remained ungoverned, and has been quietly left by the parent government to take care of herself, without the privilege on the one hand to provide a government of her own, and without any existing authority on the other to govern her.

From June 1833 until June 1834, a period of one year, there was not even the shadow of government or law, in all Western Wisconsin. In June 1834, Congress attached her to the then existing Territory of Michigan, of which Territory she nominally continued a part, until July 1836, a period of little more than two years. During the whole of this time, the whole country west, sufficient of itself for a respectable State, was included in two counties, Du Buque and Des Moines. In each of these two counties there were holden, during the term of two years, two terms of a county court, (a court of inferior jurisdiction,) as the only sources of judicial relief up to the passage of the act of Congress creating the Territory of Wisconsin. That act took effect on the 3d day of July, [illegible] term following, [illegible] months after its passage, [illegible] which time there has been [illegible] den in but one county in Western Wisconsin only. This, your memorialists are aware, has recently been owing to the unfortunate indisposition of the esteemed and meritorious judge of our district; but they are equally aware of the fact, that had Western Wisconsin existed under a separate organization, we should have found relief in the services of other members of the Judiciary, who are at present, in consequence of the great extent of our Territory, and the small number of judges dispersed at too great a distance, and too constantly engaged in the discharge of the duties of their own districts, to be enabled to afford relief to other portions of the Territory. Thus, with a population of not less than seventy-five thousand now, and of near half that number at the organization of the Territory, it will appear that we have existed as a portion of an organized Territory, for sixteen months, without one term of court only.

Your memorialists look upon these evils as growing exclusively out of the immense extent of country included within the present boundaries of the Territory, and [illegible] and belief, that nothing would effectually remedy [illegible] tion of Western [illegible] arate Territorial [illegible] your memorialists [illegible] entitled by [illegible] —by the second section [illegible] upon their [illegible] protect them in the free enjoyment of their rights, until such time as they shall be permitted to [illegible] the uniform practice and policy of the general government in the formation of Territories.

The Territories of Indiana, Illinois, the present States of Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan, were also organized [illegible] eastern portion of the present Territory of Wisconsin, into a separate Territorial government, in the year 1800, at which time the population amounted to only five thousand six hundred and forty-five, as the returns show.

The Territories of Arkansas was erected into a separate territory, in 1819, with a population of about twenty thousand. The Territory of Illinois was established in 1809, being bounded by Indiana, Kentucky, [illegible] The exact [illegible] of Illinois Territory, at the [illegible] separation from Indiana, [illegible] to your memorialists, [illegible] in 1818, one year [illegible] Constitution, amounted to [illegible] and one hundred and a few blacks—in all, to [illegible] inhabitants.

The Territory of Michigan was formed [illegible] Indiana [illegible] which until then she composed [illegible] of Michigan [illegible] time of her separation [illegible] your memorialists have been [illegible] mountain, but in the year 1830, the period of the [illegible] subsequent to the [illegible] her population [illegible] four thousand—and in the year 1836, to [illegible] thousand—so that Michigan contained [illegible] sons fifteen years, was eighteen [illegible] with a population of [illegible] full that of Western Wisconsin [illegible] and each of the above named Territories, now composing as many populous and flourishing states, were considered sufficient to separate territorial governments, with a much less population than that of Western Wisconsin, and that mostly at a time with a national debt of millions. Your memorialists therefore pray for the organization of a separate territorial government over that part of the Territory of Wisconsin west of the Mississippi river.

WISCONSIN RIVERS.

The following rivers intersect and pass through Wisconsin in their course, contributing to its fertility:

1. The Mississippi, which runs entirely through it from north to south until it strikes the north-west boundary of Illinois, at Du Buque, where it forms the eastern boundary line to the mouth of the Des Moines, a distance of near one thousand miles, or one third of its entire length. From the upper to the Lower Rapids it measures, in an average, a mile in width.

2. The Missouri. This river forms the western boundary of the Territory, from the mouth of the White earth river, to the north-western corner in the state of Missouri.

3. The Des Moines—which rises near the head waters of one of the southern branches of the St. Peters river, and running south-easterly empties into the Mississippi five miles below the foot of the Lower Rapids, and opposite Warsaw, in Illinois. This stream receives the North Fork, from the north, about two hundred miles and Iowa river, from the west, about two hundred miles from its mouth. The Des Moines river, during the winter season, [illegible] from three to four hundred miles above the Rapids, [illegible] Raccoon Fork, [illegible] Fort Dodge, [illegible] Fort Winnebago, turns suddenly almost a westerly direction, and empties into the Mississippi near Prairie du Chien.

4. The St. Peters river rises in a small lake called Big Stone Lake, in latitude forty-five degrees and thirty minutes, and runs to the south and east to the east, and empties into the Mississippi three miles below the Falls of St. Anthony.

5. The Chippewa—7. St. Croix—8. Wisk river—9. Rum River, emptying into the Mississippi on the east side; and 10. Upper Iowa—11. Lower Iowa—emptying in from the West—and Fox river, Milwaukie, and some minor streams, emptying into Lake Michigan."

The rapid decline in numbers of the present royal family of England, is unexampled in history. George III had fifteen children, and thirteen of them lived to maturity. Seven of them still survive, at ages all beyond the average of any family in the world; and where in the third generation? One young lady, the present Queen, representing the Duke of Kent; one young gentleman, heir to the King of Hanover; and in each third generation of the Duke of Cumberland four persons in all, and [illegible] in the same year, [illegible] where their grand father was [illegible] years old, and one born [illegible] thousand years after; these compose all the survivors. Of what other family, the head of which was born a century ago, could the same be said?

The first number of the United States Magazine and Democratic Review has appeared. We proceed to give a more ample notice of it as our space to-day will allow us. The "Introduction," a paper written with unusual ability, is eloquent and spirited, and lays down the principles on which the work will be conducted. They are such as we heartily commend, and rejoice to see entered with such boldness and fairness. The article entitled "Glances at Congress," is entertaining, forcible, and important, and written apparently without the least mixture of political prejudice. We have been much pleased with the "European review of American Democracy," and have found the "Retrospective view of European politics" full of knowledge. We shall under a speedy occasion to return to the work, which we strongly recommend to the attention of the friends of liberal principles.
